

Unipart Site Tour

Unipart is an innovative logistics provider, utilising lean as a methodology for adding value to its customers in a wide number of sectors, including automotive, consumer, technology, aerospace, defence, leisure and rail.

Unipart is a pioneer of Lean Thinking, with Professor Dan Jones having described their implementation as "an excellent example of the application of Lean in world-wide parts distribution", and Toyoda san, Director and Member of the Board, Toyota Motor Corporation saying of Unipart's Oxford operation "... this facility is now one of the best examples of TPS that I have seen anywhere in the world outside of Japan."

Sean Agnew, National Business Development Manager, for the Australian operation, will provide an insight into Unipart's 20 year Lean Journey and outline some key learning lessons for anyone embarking on a Lean implementation.

The Unipart Way is a philosophy of continuous improvement focused on driving the company to achieve world class standards of quality, delivery and customer service. The company has developed a range of tools and techniques to create continuous improvements within the organisation - from creative problem solving processes, standard work and visual management techniques at grass roots level to policy deployment techniques which ensure that any activity within the company is directed at and aligned with strategy and objectives.
